"There is a Salve for every wound." We refer to De Witt's Witch Hazel Salve, cures burns, bruises, cuts, indolent sores, as a local application in the nostrils it cures catarrh, and always cures piles. J. K. Jones.

The Noonday Club.

In Cleveland there is a club which is doing worlds of good among the self supporting young women of that city. It is appropriately called the Noonday club. It has two cool, shady rooms in one of Cleveland's business blocks. These rooms are the rendezvous daily between the hours of 11 and 2 of some 50 young women who come there to rest and refresh themselves from the strain of the morning and prepare for the fatigues of the afternoon. The club is composed both of young women who are self supporting and of others who have more leisure. Upon the latter the work of the club chiefly devolves.

One of the two rooms is fitted up with small tables covered with white cloths, and upon them are served simple but appetizing lunches in pretty dishes and at prices that are just high enough to cover the expense of the original cost and of serving. Tea, coffee and milk are served for 3 cents, meats, cake and pie for 5 cents and the other things at correspondingly low prices. The room adjoining is fitted up cozily with divans, tables, a writing desk, bookshelves and a piano. It is known as the library and is as much prized by the girls as the lunchroom. The privileges of the club cost 10 cents a month in addition to the voluntary expenses. Though only members are permitted the habitual use of the rooms, visitors are made cordially welcome, and are, more than that, especially invited. —New York Evening Sun.

The Vanderbilt Women.

Mrs. Maria Vanderbilt, widow of William H. Vanderbilt, is a quiet, retiring woman, who allows her son to attend to her financial affairs. Her daughters are more self assertive. These women are each worth at least $15,000,000. Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard, Mrs. Sloan, Mrs. Seward Webb and Mrs. McK. Twombly each received $10,000,000 from their father and have grown steadily richer. Each is possessed of strength of character and marked individuality. They manage their own money and spend it in their own way. Mrs. Shepard has built several houses and has endowed beds in hospitals and scholarships in women's colleges. Since her husband's death she has taken in hand the fitting of her son for business life, and this will be done thoroughly. Mrs. Shepard's sisters are like her. All are liberal, but all use their great wealth with the skill and discrimination that have characterized the Vanderbilt men and women.

Women as Pallbearers.

The custom of having women pallbearers at funerals will probably soon be permanently established here. There have been several funerals of that kind in the past year. The pallbearers who bore the remains of Miss Haber to the grave were eight young girls, dressed from head to foot in white. Miss Haber lived at Preston and Broadway and died last Wednesday. The funeral took place Friday afternoon from the residence. The young ladies wore white caps, gloves, dresses and shoes, the emblems of purity. Naturally they attracted a good deal of attention, it being so unusual for females to act in the capacity of pallbearers, but many were heard to commend it as a beautiful departure from the old custom, particularly in the case of the death of young women. —Louisville Courier-Journal.

Women as Telegraphers.

It may have been noticed that not so many young women are engaged as telegraph operators as in former years. While women have shown their ability in this field of work, it has been found that they do not stand the strain and are not equal to emergencies as well as men. Professor Ewald of Berlin claims that nervous diseases are increasing among female telegraph operators, and he declares his opinion that it is an employment in which women should not engage. —Chicago Tribune.

Titled Ladies in the Bath Club.

In different parts of London there are being established bath clubs, where girls have certain days set apart for them and hundreds of women are learning to swim. It has become very fashionable, and such titled ladies as the Duchess of Portland, Duchess of Sutherland, Marchioness of Londonderry and the Countess of Gosford form the ladies' committee of the new and swell bath club in Berkeley street.

Miss Margaret Stokes, the distinguished Irish lady antiquarian, is busily engaged upon an illustrated work on the sculptured crosses of ancient Ireland. Miss Stokes is a well known authority on early Irish art, and she is an honorary member of several learned societies.

His Name.

Tarsney of Missouri is a brother of the adjutant general of Colorado, and also of Tim Tarsney, who was for several years a member from Michigan. The latter used to tell an anecdote of his reception in a Connecticut city, where he was sent by the congressional campaign committee to do some political missionary work. The people turned out with becoming enthusiasm, and the hall was packed. The chairman had prepared a speech for the occasion. It was short, but a miracle of oratory.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "this tremendous and cultured audience that has assembled this evening will have the extreme felicity of listening to an orator whose voice has resounded with telling effect in the halls of the national legislature. He has often been honored by the people of his state with election to that great body, the house of representatives, and so great and potent has been his labor for his countrymen that throughout the length and breadth of this broad land his name has become a favorite household word."

Here the orator bent down a moment and whispered to Tarsney, "What is your name, sir?" and receiving the reply continued:

"Now have the most gratifying pleasure of introducing to you Congressman Tarsney." —Kate Field's Washington.

A Doubt.

Minutes lengthened into hours and hours into days, but she came no nearer. Friends told him she was faithless. But sitting in the midst of his lonely home he hoped.

"She has eloped with another," they urged.

He shook his head.
"Perhaps!"
It was evident that he was arguing against his own sad convictions.
"She is waiting for change somewhere." —Detroit Tribune.

Pastidious.

Customer (examining samples of false teeth)—Will you kindly retire from the room while I am looking these over?
Dentist—Why do you object to my being present?
Customer—You know it isn't etiquette to be seen picking one's teeth in the presence of others. —Boston News.

In Former Times.

As the little fleet advanced Columbus eagerly scanned the shore.
"Well, I declare," he suddenly exclaimed, with great animation, "living pictures, as I'm alive!"
A period of silence intervened.
"Yes," said the eminent navigator presently, in answer to an inquiry by the first mate, "I shall be using the opera glasses all the forenoon."
There were murmurs of discontent among the crew, but nothing came of it. —Detroit Tribune.

"Open All Night."

—Life.

General Putnam's Duel.

Every schoolboy is familiar with the story of "Putnam and the Wolf," but here is another story about the doughty Revolutionary general which is not so well known.

Some four years before the war of Independence Putnam offered a haughty regular officer, who looked upon the provincials with contempt, by asserting that the latter were as courageous as the former. The dispute ran high, and at length the scarlet coated lieutenant asked scornfully:

"Dare you fight a duel with me?"

"Yes, at any moment," answered the provincial major.

"Then I challenge you," said the lieutenant. "Choose your weapons."

"Two kegs of gunpowder—one for you and one for me—are the weapons. As I choose," said Putnam; "the time, tomorrow morning at sunrise; the distance, 10 paces; the method, you to sit on one leg and I on the other, and a slow fuse attached to each to be lighted, and the one who sits longest to be declared the victor."

The lieutenant was annoyed, but was compelled to accept the strange conditions. Putnam was to furnish the kegs of powder and the fuses, and at the appointed time the next morning they were at the designated place.

The combatants seated themselves, and the fuse was applied to the fuses. As it went flaming along the lieutenant became uneasy and turned pale, while the major sat composed and smiling in the presence of threatened danger.

As the fire drew near the kegs the lieutenant's courage failed him, and he arose and fled, while his antagonist remained seated until the fuse was exhausted. The kegs were filled with onions! The lieutenant almost died of chagrin. —Life's Calendar.

Revenge.

"I got even with that horrid Mrs. Prink for snubbing me on the street."

"How?"

"I went over to call just when I knew she was taking her beauty sleep and spent the afternoon." —Chicago Inter Ocean.
